John Sneyd, Chief Legal Counsel, Civil Aviation Authority of New Zealand, Wellington

John has spent the majority of his career to date in legal roles in the wider state sector. He is currently Chief Legal Counsel with the Civil Aviation Authority and Aviation Security Service where he manages a small team specialising in aviation, international and public law. As a member of the CAA executive, John has had the opportunity to test-fly his theories on the best way for in-house lawyers to make a strategic contribution to their organisation. Prior to joining the CAA John spent five years as Chief Legal Advisor at the Department of Building & Housing. John remains cautiously optimistic as to the Black Caps' chances of winning the cricket World Cup.
